"Killing is one of the worst of all crimes because it takes away all value of that person's future."

Respect for life can be moral based.

I think that abortion can be good in the case of:

- rape of mother

- mother at risk

- severe disability of child

Human Rights always dominate the abortion debate. Legal problem? When does humanity exist? Example: only at birth.

People transpose normal human rights onto the unborn child.

May stand out as a moral/religious argument but will fail as a legal one.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1948: "Everyone has the right to life...".

The right to life is the most fundamental right to a human being. That is why people feel so strongly about abortion. Even those who decide to have an abortion would not find the decision easy to make because a pregnant woman is separating potential life from her body.

"I have come to believe that those who support abortion on demand do so because in all sincerity they cannot accept that an unborn baby is a human being." — Jill Knight, MP, 1966.
